

Who is the boss?

Who do you work for?

Who is your boss?

Who employs you?

You are the boss.

The reality is, you are self-employed. You decide when you going to work or not go to work. You decide how much effort you'll put into your job. You decide who in your family you will or will not respond to.

Everyone is self-employed. You might rent yourself out to one organization. However, you can decide to stay or leave. You decide how much effort you will exert. You decide when it's time to move on to a new job.

Of course, the boss can fire you. Yet that just releases you so you can move on. Sometimes being fired is the best thing that can happen to you.

Being self-employed, it's up to you what you will do, and how much you will be paid. Yes, you determine your wages by what you do and accomplish.

Stand tall, be aware, it's you. You decide what to do, what not to do, and who to work for. It's your choice and you do make the choice. No decision is in fact a decision.

The problem is that sometimes you make the easy choice and the easy choice may not be the best one for you. If the choice does not make you feel good, then it's the wrong choice.

You are the boss and you decide what to do or not to do. If it's not working, you are not happy or fulfilled then it's time to change. You are the only one that can change it, and you are the only one that knows what is best for you.

Being the boss of yourself is a big responsibility. You need to do what is best. You need to accept the right challenges and exceed your own expectations. You need to give whatever you decide to do your best every day. It's for you, it's about you, and it should be something you are proud of.

Being the boss means you are accountable to yourself. You have to measure your own results. If they are not good enough you need to change, you need to make them good enough.

Look in the mirror. Do you like what you see? If not, change it. You are the boss.